A note from your teacher...

Music is one of the greatest forces on this earth. It has the power to heal, transform, and move everyone it touches. My goal, as a teacher, is to foster a deep-seated love for music that will transcend the student's entire life and give them the ability to put music out into the world. I aim to create well rounded musicians--not just a piano player, or just a singer--a musician. Meaning, my goal is never just to teach the basics of an instrument. Through a judgment free environment, full of creativity and empowerment, I strive to instill a genuine understanding of music at its core, via music theory, ear training, performance, composition, music notation and technique.

About the teacher...

Jacqueline Jensen is a vocalist and pianist from Edwardsville, Illinois. She began her music career, at a young age, at Southern Illinois University Edwardsville, studying piano for 8 years. In high school she fell in love with voice, choosing then to pursue it as a profession. She was accepted into Opera Theater of St. Louis's prestigious "Artist's In Training" program, where she studied classical voice for 2 years. After high school graduation she began the Vocal Jazz program at the University of North Texas, where she studied jazz, extensively, for two years. During that time she learned classical and jazz theory, while also becoming proficient in jazz piano. In 2012, Jacqueline transferred to Belmont University to finish out her Bachelors in Music in Commercial Voice, with an emphasis in Performance. Since graduation, she has worked as a childcare professional, with the opportunity to introduce music to children at a young age. She has also worked as a wedding singer, performed with a band, and started writing her own original music.
